

HISTORY AND PURPOSE

The Coordinating Council for Independent Living (CCIL) has been serving West Virginians with Developmental Disabilities (DD) since 1980 through a variety of programs designed to assist in developing and maintaining an independent lifestyle. CCIL is committed to providing the highest quality of service to all eligible residents in all counties throughout the state of WV.

MISSION AND PHILOSOPHY

CCIL was organized to serve as a leader in providing services necessary to ensure that persons with disabilities have the opportunity to achieve and maintain their highest level of independent functioning. Supporting this mission is the understanding that all individuals have the right to live as independently as possible and that the services needed to achieve and maintain independence should be available and accessible regardless of age, sex, race, ethnic background, religion, political persuasion, type of disability, financial status, or level of functioning.

The referral process can begin in person, by written request, or by a simple phone call to any of CCIL's four offices. Individuals may refer themselves, other family members, or their friends. Any person having responsibility for or care of another individual may make a referral for service.

CCIL Developmental Disabilities

- CCIL professionals carry a small manageable case load which permits time for quality, personal service.
- CCIL provides 24 hour crisis on-call services.
- CCIL professionals will make monthly visits to make sure you have all the services you need and that they are being provided in a quality manner.
- CCIL recognizes the individual through person centered planning rather than offering "one size fits all" services.

Developmental Disabilities

Service Coordination, sometimes called Case Management, is designed to help locate needed services and ensures personal strengths are identified and incorporated into person centered strategies. CCIL staff assists by linking individuals to desired and needed services and by monitoring the delivery of those services. These processes are used to assist in helping individuals to achieve their maximum potential and obtain their goals.

Habilitation Services are designed to meet training needs of individuals in their homes and communities. CCIL staff design training programs based on each individual's identified needs and assists with in-home staffing to ensure individuals obtain maximum independence. Additionally, this service allows for assistance with behavioral concerns by the development and implementation of positive behavior support plans developed by certified professionals.

To receive services, an individual must:

- Be at least 3 years of age
- Be Medicaid eligible or be able to privately pay for services
- Be diagnosed with an eligible diagnosis (Intellectual or Developmental Disability)
- Have assessment based identified needs
